We present evidence of the impact of asymmetric information on firms' likelihood to issue equity and to be acquired. We argue that the existence of corporate sponsored defined benefit pension liabilities, and their magnitude, are a source of risk for buyers of the firm's shares. We show that firms that sponsor DB pension plans and have a large pension deficit relative to their market capitalization are less likely: (i) to raise equity through SEOs; (ii) to be the target in an acquisition and to be taken over; and (iii) to use stock when they acquire other companies or assets.
