REFLECTIONS ON THE PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE OF DIGITAL ARCHIVES

Lecture by Jane Winters, School of Advanced Study, University of London

Wednesday, 18 September 2019, 16.00 - 17.30

Blackbox, Maison des Sciences Humaines, Belval Campus

This talk will consider how the large-scale digitisation of primary sources, and the increasing availability of born-digital data, have affected both archival and historical practice. It will discuss the challenges posed by digital archives, explore how effectively historians have addressed the impact of the digital on their research, and discuss the need for greater collaboration between researchers and archivists as archives become 'digital by instinct and design' (The National Archives of the UK, March 2017).

Jane Winters is Chair of Digital Humanities and Pro-Dean for Libraries at the School of Advanced Study, University of London. Her research interests include digital history, the archived web, big data for humanities research, new forms of scholarly communication, and open access publishing. She is a Fellow and Councillor of the Royal Historical Society.

This event is part of the 'New Horizons: Confronting the Digital Turn in the Humanities' lecture series organised by the Luxembourg Centre for Contemporary and Digital History (C²DH).

The lecture is followed by a drinks reception.
